CoVE Collaborative: Virtual London Institute
Students’ as avatars scan in or photo their design development and upload to co-display across colleges within the virtual galleries 3D chat room with students as avatars walking around and display areas, chatting and sharing ideas in a gallery.
The virtual medium is a logical extension of the physical teaching and learning environment.
it enables student/staff interaction and feedback from remote sites.
With the opportunities for staff and student comment and evaluation at interim and final review stages.

this print is influenced by the sahara desert and greek culture. i have taken the colours from sunset scenes and made the texture quite rough and pastey. hidden in the sand dunes are the odd greek symbols. hope u like it.

a) you could see what others were doing and ask them how they did it and their technique so that you can try it

b) you could compare the standard of your work easily

Other comment

Dated: Thu May 20, 2004 10:39 am

a) Was useful in comparison of work with other colleges, and to keep in contact with students involved in the joint project

a) being able to read peoples comments about the work

b) I liked the fact you could see others in the room, the virtual bar made it fun and i liked the fact we worked with another college so we could see how the work with diffrent inspirations was presented.

Other comment

I would love to be able to show all work like this on other courses and also see pictures or downloaded photos of other courses work. I think this should be available on blackboard and each course should be allocated a room and i think it would be good if the students voted in the work to be displayed.

a) To honnest I found that the VI web site was pointless, i found that if i needed help I would have to ask other students rather than the teacher because he was too busy.

b) I found this questionnaire very funny because of the many spelling mistakes and grammer problems, which just goes to show you how incomfortable LI teachers are.
