several hundred on the north and 500,000 on the south. It was a great day for democracy and peace.

Election Day, November 3, 1988, was the culmination of years of political activism and campaigning. The voters had made their choices, and the outcome was uncertain. The candidates had worked hard to win over the electorate, and the result was a testament to the power of democratic participation.

In the end, it was a close election, with the winner emerging by a margin of just a few thousand votes. The victory was celebrated with joy and relief, and the country looked forward to a new era of cooperation and progress. The future looked promising, and the promise of democracy lived on.
