ESCAMOTAGE ~ SLEIGHT OF HAND, TRICKERY, CONJURING, VANISHING

Taking its name from the Bautier de Kolta illusion Escamotage D’une Dame - an 1800s magical vanishing trick in which the female body was spectacularly disappeared under a heavily patterned covering - Escamotage negotiates the language of the Persian rug as a motif for female vanishing. Fraternizing the violence of enchanted disappearance with the bizarre ‘hidden mothers’ photographs of the Victorian age – in which mothers concealed themselves under carpets in order to hold their children still for portraits - the Persian rug is ever present for its ability to simultaneously reveal and conceal an exposure of the female form. The use of projection onto a darkened surface further enhances the sense of liminality, whilst the gradual degrading of the slide through prolonged contact with the light creates a new layer of vanishing.
