University of Huddersfield Repository

Taylor, Susan M., Dyer, Mary A. and Frankland, Sharon

Building a vision of early years practice: How can reflection support this process

Original Citation

This version is available at http://eprints.hud.ac.uk/4698/

The University Repository is a digital collection of the research output of the University, available on Open Access. Copyright and Moral Rights for the items on this site are retained by the individual author and/or other copyright owners. Users may access full items free of charge; copies of full text items generally can be reproduced, displayed or performed and given to third parties in any format or medium for personal research or study, educational or not-for-profit purposes without prior permission or charge, provided:

- The authors, title and full bibliographic details is credited in any copy;
- A hyperlink and/or URL is included for the original metadata page; and
- The content is not changed in any way.

For more information, including our policy and submission procedure, please contact the Repository Team at: E.mailbox@hud.ac.uk.

http://eprints.hud.ac.uk/
Learning is:

- situated
- social
- distributed

Setting
University
Student
Expert

What is Reflection?
Reflection is the process of critically examining one’s own practice, specifically asking:
- does our practice achieve our aims
- who has defined these aims
- do they fit with our own vision of good practice

Reflection offers the practitioner the means of using their practice to learn from constantly – “Because I pay attention to my practice I am open to what is unfolding. Being open I am …curious and ready to consider new possibilities. Every situation becomes an opportunity for learning.” (Johns, 2004, p.6)

“A continuously improving setting will have well-qualified and experienced staff who understand and engage in informed reflective practice” (DCSF, 2008, p.8).

Senior practitioners achieving Early Years Professional Status, will become reflective practitioners who “review, analyse and evaluate their own and others’ practice” (CWDC, 2008, p.5).

Effective reflection requires the practitioner to have a vision of practice within which to evaluate their own actions, i.e. “a statement of desirable practice made up of beliefs and values … that gives meaning and direction to everyday practice” (Johns, 2004, p.45).

This research focuses on how the skills of reflection can be taught and supported for practitioners with little or no experience of working in the early years sector. These ‘novices’ are disadvantaged by their lack of a vision of practice. By concentrating on supporting their reflective skills, we hope their vision will emerge.