

University of HUDDERSFIELD

University of Huddersfield Repository

Thomas, Paul

Youth identities and the threat of extremism

Original Citation

Thomas, Paul (2010) Youth identities and the threat of extremism. In: SEPD Seminar, 5th February 2010, University of Huddersfield. (Unpublished)

This version is available at <http://eprints.hud.ac.uk/id/eprint/9565/>

The University Repository is a digital collection of the research output of the University, available on Open Access. Copyright and Moral Rights for the items on this site are retained by the individual author and/or other copyright owners. Users may access full items free of charge; copies of full text items generally can be reproduced, displayed or performed and given to third parties in any format or medium for personal research or study, educational or not-for-profit purposes without prior permission or charge, provided:

- The authors, title and full bibliographic details is credited in any copy;
- A hyperlink and/or URL is included for the original metadata page; and
- The content is not changed in any way.

For more information, including our policy and submission procedure, please contact the Repository Team at: E.mailbox@hud.ac.uk.

<http://eprints.hud.ac.uk/>

Youth Identities and the threat of 'Extremism'

Dr. Paul Thomas,
School of Education and Professional Development
University of Huddersfield

Contents

- Youth Identities: the context
- The Research process
- Evidence: Muslim and British?
- Evidence: Ways of understanding 'Muslim' youth identity
- Evidence: White youth identities 'under pressure'?
- Conclusion : Countering the threat of Extremism

Youth Identities: The Context

- 2001 disturbances and tensions in other towns led to a policy re-think:
Community Cohesion
- A clear focus on ethnic segregation and 'parallel lives' and how to overcome this
- Positive local evidence on this, but we need to know more about 'identities', including the possibility of shared identities

Youth Identities: The Context

- 7/7 bombings and subsequent plots highlight a real and ongoing Islamist terrorist threat
- Preventing Violent Extremism initiative, but with a problematic focus on Muslim communities only, and Muslim youth specifically
- Suggestion that 'British' identity is rejected by some young Muslims

Youth Identities: The Context

- Significantly increased electoral support for the BNP, accompanied by a higher profile
- English Defence League operating a deliberate 'strategy of tension'
- Increased political and academic focus on the 'white working class'
- 'Connecting Communities Fund' focussed on white areas 'under pressure'

Youth Identities: the context

- Young people have been central to all these events and policy developments
- Towns and cities either side of the Pennines have provided much of the focus
- Significant demographic pressures here - over 50% of all British Muslims are under the age of 25
- We need to understand youth identities, and the ways they are changing and developing, better

The Research process

- Long-standing relationship between the University, the local areas of Oldham and Rochdale and their agencies
- Issues under investigation are national problems
- Creative work already underway locally
- Aimed to generate helpful data for use in policy direction and further study

The Research Process

- Built on existing relationships and links
- Took an 'action' approach, aiming to build the confidence and skills of practitioners
- Youth Workers carried out research activity in their own settings
- Designed and used a range of research approaches to suit young people

The Research Process

- Individual and group interviews and discussions
- Questionnaires
- 'Identity' ranking sheets
- Word and sentence association exercises

Recorded in a variety of ways,
reflecting the youth work setting

Evidence: Muslim and British?

Please put these 8 types of 'Identity' in the order of importance to YOU, with 1= most important and 8= least important (please give each one a ranking number from 1 to 8):

- British
- English
- Rochdale resident
- Ethnic background (e.g. Asian /White/Black)
- Northerner
- Religion (e.g. Muslim/Christian/Hindu)
- Local Area(e.g. Langlely/ Littleborough)
- European

Evidence: Muslim and British?

- Islam is overwhelmingly the most important form of Identity for Asian young people, but..
- This is not in conflict with being 'British', and most are 'proud to be British'
- Muslim young people see 'English' as being for White young people, not them
- White young people place more importance on 'English', rather than 'British'

Evidence: Muslim and British?

Self-ascribed ethnicity	Rank Religion 1/2	Rank 'English' 1/2	Rank 'British' 1/2
'White' categories	7	75	56
'Asian' categories	93	3	20
'Black' and other	44	56	44

Evidence: Muslim and British?

- We need more evidence about the relative strengths of faith and national identity but...
- 63% of those self-identifying as 'Muslim' definitely agreed with the statement 'I am proud to say that I am British' (less than the 80% of the 'non-Muslim' group), and only 10% definitely disagreed,
- For Asian young people, 'British' is much more inclusive than 'English', which is seen negatively as only being about White people but..
- Evidence from Scotland is that Pakistani-origin young people are very comfortable with a bi-cultural identity: 'Scottish Muslim', 'Scottish Asian' - can such identities develop in England?

Evidence: ways of understanding 'Muslim' identity

- Muslim young people more supportive of diversity than white young people:
- "British means you can be multi-cultured yet keep your identity."
- "British means being loyal to England and not being a terrorist and blowing it up."
- British means living with different people."

Evidence: ways of understanding 'Muslim' identity

- 'Muslim' identity is much more prominent than 20/25 years ago
- 'Real' identity finally acknowledged publicly?
- Key events have shaped and strengthened this identity: Iranian revolution, first Gulf War, Satanic Verses controversy, as well as the (racist) media focus on Muslims
- Promotion of this identity by countries like Saudi Arabia
- Policy has focussed on specific ethnic groups and their differences, increasingly 'accepting' Muslims as a distinctly different group

Evidence: ways of understanding 'Muslim' identity

- Young people have consciously adopted and developed 'Muslim' identity over the past 20 years
- A proud and 'defensive' identity in the face of racism and ignorance
- A reaction that is actually about economic poverty and exclusion in the absence of a focus on class solidarities
- Islamic political groups have filled the vacuum left by lack of open discussion about integration and identity (Kenan Malik)
- Young women are looking to Islamic teaching to challenge cultural restrictions and norms that limit them
- Young men are using Islam to police and control young women in their own communities, whilst bolstering a male territorial identity (Macey, M./ Jacobson, J.)

Evidence: Ways of understanding 'Muslim' identity

- Muslim identity encourages some young men surveyed to make very prejudiced, faith-based judgements on others - these focus on being 'godless', 'immoral' and use of alcohol
- Significant family employment involvement in the 'night-time economy' may well be significantly influencing these opinions

Evidence: White identities under pressure?

- Strong racist language and prejudices from a significant proportion of the white young people surveyed
- Resentment of nearby Asian communities as being favoured by government policy and funding and doing better
- Significantly less support for diversity and more pessimism about future of multicultural society

Evidence: White identities under pressure?

Responses to the statement '*Different sorts of people get on well in ' (name of local town)

Respondent Group	Definitely Agree (%)	Definitely Disagree (%)
Muslim	25	20
Non-Muslim	14	40

Evidence: White identities under pressure?

- 60% of the group self-identifying as 'Muslim' agreed that 'Britain is a stronger country because of difference' as opposed to 23% of the rest of the sample. In response to the converse statement that 'Britain is stronger if groups live separately', only 16% of the Muslim population definitely agreed and 71% definitely disagreed, as opposed to 36% of the non-Muslim remainder definitely agreeing and 30% definitely disagreeing.

Evidence: White identities under pressure?

- White young people have less experience of diversity
- Focus on ethnic minorities in the absence of a public focus on class inequality means that white working class communities and their needs have not been addressed (Runnymede Trust)
- Anti-racism has often been clumsy and has had a counter-productive impact on white young people (Hewitt, R.)
- BNP have filled the electoral and ideological vacuum left by other political parties losing interest in working class communities that have faced de-industrialisation and cultural change (Copsey, N)

Conclusion: Countering the threat of extremism

- Both White and Muslim working class communities have faced significant social exclusion, with evidence that 'self-essentialising' of identities has been one response
- Policy responses in the past have accepted and hardened physical and cultural ethnic segregation, so making separate identities more possible - PVE has carried on that approach
- In those conditions, it is easier for a minority of people to move from further from a separate identity towards 'extremism' or even 'violent extremism'

Conclusion : Countering the threat of Extremism

- Most young people in Oldham and Rochdale had segregated experiences but want more mixing and cohesion
- They do have friends of a different ethnic background in school, but hardly ever meet outside school
- Those that had experienced mixing were very positive about it, and most young people want more such contact
- This included support for mixed housing areas
- More cohesion is the only way to build 'resilience' against extremism, both within and across communities