Burnham stresses need for more NHS care at home

There must be a "decisive shift" in the NHS to provide more care in people's homes, the health secretary has said.

Andy Burnham said the health service must be more "confident" in being able to offer services, such as kidney dialysis, outside hospitals.

This could improve patient experiences as well as save billions, he added.

The Tories have pledged to put patients in the "driving seat", with people able to receive treatment for more minor ailments in their local communities.

Mr Burnham said more treatments must be offered outside hospitals
