

University of Huddersfield Repository

Beauchamp-Pryor, Karen

From Absent to Active Voices: the participation of disabled students in higher education

Original Citation

Beauchamp-Pryor, Karen (2009) From Absent to Active Voices: the participation of disabled students in higher education. In: Degrees of Independence: Providing inclusive learning in Higher Education, 16th - 17th April 2009, University of Huddersfield, Huddersfield, UK. (Unpublished)

This version is available at http://eprints.hud.ac.uk/id/eprint/8360/

The University Repository is a digital collection of the research output of the University, available on Open Access. Copyright and Moral Rights for the items on this site are retained by the individual author and/or other copyright owners. Users may access full items free of charge; copies of full text items generally can be reproduced, displayed or performed and given to third parties in any format or medium for personal research or study, educational or not-for-profit purposes without prior permission or charge, provided:

- The authors, title and full bibliographic details is credited in any copy;
- A hyperlink and/or URL is included for the original metadata page; and
- The content is not changed in any way.

For more information, including our policy and submission procedure, please contact the Repository Team at: E.mailbox@hud.ac.uk.

http://eprints.hud.ac.uk/

Degrees of Independence Conference

From Absent to Active Voices: the participation of disabled students in higher education

Karen Beauchamp-Pryor PhD k.beauchamp-pryor@swansea.ac.uk

School of Health Science

Funded by The Economic Social Research Council as part of a Postdoctoral Fellowship Award www.esrcsocietytoday.ac.uk

From Absent to Active Voices: the participation of disabled students in higher education

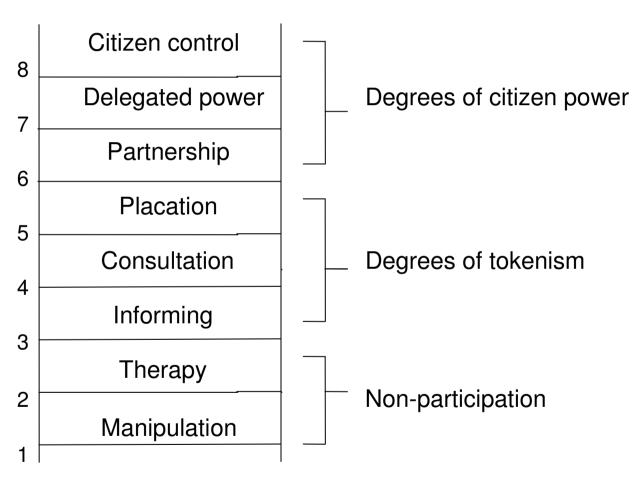

- Why is participation so important?
- How effective are the voices of a marginalised group in practice?
 - (i) participation of disabled students at a legislative and national policy level
 - (ii) experiences of disabled students at a case study university in Wales

Why is participation so important?

- Equalising relationships
- Confronting dominant views and values
- Raising awareness of inequality and oppressive practices
- Empowerment: socio-politically and individually

Why is participation so important?

Eight Rungs on a Ladder of Citizen Participation

(Source: Arnstein 1969: 217)

How effective is the voice of a marginalised group in practice?

- Involvement of disabled people at a legislative and policy level
- Experiences of disabled students at a case study university in Wales

How effective is the voice of a marginalised group in practice?

Participation at a legislative and national policy level

Representation?

"...articulate their own assumptions about the needs of disabled people rather than the needs of disabled people as they themselves express them". (Oliver 1990: 105)

Collaboration?

Skill argued in a Government briefing that:

'there is no sound reason why the increase in equality for one group should be made to threaten the existing rights of another, the universities'. (quoted in Hansard 1995a, 22nd May, col. 876).

Lord Beloff in the House of Lords:

'...those who represent disabled students believe that the way forward is through co-operation between such organisations and the institutions of higher education. They deplore the interjection of an unnecessary compulsory power ...' (Hansard 1995b, 22nd May, col. 876)

Skill's review of Disabled Student Allowances (DSAs):

Completed questionnaires:

8 students (approx)

64 higher educational institutions (HEIs)

- Experiences of students largely omitted
- Focussed on the experiences of Local Educational Authorities (LEAs), disability officers and assessors

Quality Assurance Group (QAG)

Department of Further Education and Skills (DfES) officials
Representatives from Local Education Authorities (LEAs),
Assessment Centres, Disability Officers, one Skill representative and one National Union of Students (NUS) representative

'It is clear that many of the parties involved in these meetings have a vested interest in ensuring the system is reorganised in a manner which is favourable to themselves rather than best for students'. (NUS Annual Conference Report 2004)

Tokenistic?

'they want us there but don't listen and take on board the student viewpoint'. (NUS Disability Officer email: 25/03/04)

'If we don't get our, the student, point across at these meetings they win, they close ranks and cover up the cracks in the system, because it is their system, they control. ... They are approaching it from an administration and what's best for assessors/LEAs prospect, their own interests. As opposed to this is a system for disabled students and what's best for the students'. (NUS Disability Officer Interview: 21/01/04)

- (i) Effectiveness and genuineness of consultation
- (ii) Issues around disability identity and stigma
- (iii) Process of empowerment

What happens in practice? An example of a participatory exercise at the case study university

Effectiveness and genuineness of consultation:

Christine (interview: 09/06/03):

'They [disabled students] don't think they are listened too'.

'Well I think it's important, but only if views are taken on board. Not if you are asked along just to show you are being included. ... If they are going to consult with students then they have to take on board what they say. Really listen to them'.

Effectiveness and genuineness of consultation:

Sophie (Interview: 11/03/03)

An alternative expertise:

'There are some things, people who aren't disabled just don't realise, a simple example is the electric sockets in lectures, or things like nowhere for someone using a laptop to sit'.

Inclusion:

'I want to sit with my friends, I don't want a separate desk, it would be horrible, it would be so embarrassing, but at the same time sitting with everybody else, when [the desk] is too high or too far away [pause]'.

Disability identity and stigma:

'I don't want to be different to the rest, you know. A lot of people on the course don't even know I'm disabled. I don't sort of advertise the fact'. (David Second Interview: 4/12/03)

'In the hierarchy of social values, prevalent within British society, which accords little or no status to disabled people, describing oneself as disabled cannot be seen as a positive step. There is no social status to be gained for 'coming out' as disabled'. (Watson 2002: 525)

The process of empowerment: support/encouragement/taking control

'You get ideas from other people, how they have managed and things'. (Rebecca Interview: 13/03/03)

'It would have been interesting to talk to other disabled people, what their experiences had been like with the Disability Office, access to information, or access to services and stuff'.

(Dawn Interview: 20/03/03)

What happens in practice? An example of a participatory exercise

Disability Equality Scheme – active consultation

Case study stated:

'Student input into the initial plan arose from one to one discussion with students, Disability Forum priorities and direct comments and requests from students. The ongoing structural direct inclusion of disabled students in the continual development of the plan is seen as a primary importance'.

In reality, consultation was non-existent.